Axis Studio Promo Video · Biscuit Originals

For Sable

WHAT THIS IS

Editorial snapshot of everything the board has confirmed after the Theme 01 conflict was resolved - so illustration can start without parsing the full canvas. Prepared for Sable.

PROJECT SNAPSHOT

Client	Jordan - wants a specific, recognizable dog ("I want a cute dog. I want my dog.")
Brand	Biscuit Originals - premium dog treats. Real ingredients, no fillers.
Job	Studio Promo Video illustration system for Axis
Owner	Sable, illustration · Maya, creative direction

CONFIRMED VISUAL DIRECTION

Illustration as style, dog as subject.

Keep Theme 01's gestural, line-led language - loose, graphic, not render-led - but ground it in one animal. Warmth is shared; specificity was the gap.

Style	Gestural illustration. Line-led, not render-led. Graphic confidence over polish.
Character	Golden retriever only - one recognizable dog, not a multi-breed mascot set.
Tone	Welcoming and warm (Priya). Emotional restraint over cute-for-cute's-sake.
Not this	Rounded multi-breed mascots, photoreal product-first as the primary system, or high-chroma maximalism as the hero look.

WHAT WE RESOLVED

Sable's six references read mascot-first and multi-breed. Jordan's brief asks for one specific dog. The disagreement was stylization, not quality. Direction 02 (photography primary, illustration as accent) was not taken. Default to the confirmed rules above if source boards still disagree.

> "I want a cute dog. I want my dog. There's a difference and I can feel it immediately when I see the sketch."
>
> Jordan, client brief

> "The work must feel more welcoming and warm to the audiences."

THEME MAP ON THE BOARD

01	Gestural Illustration - locked direction. Loose, expressive dog characters.
02	Photorealistic / Product-first - reference only, not the system.
03	Vintage / Heritage packaging - editorial warmth, not the illustration language.
04	Bold Graphic / Identity - type, grid, color blocking for shelf; supporting.
05	Bright / Maximalist - audience-first energy; do not let chroma overrun the line work.

AUDIENCE (PRIYA)

Millennial dog owners, 20-40, urban or urban-adjacent. They buy the $14 olive oil and have opinions about fonts. They distrust brands that try too hard to be charming, and brands so minimal they feel cold. Biscuit lives in the gap. The illustration should feel found, not performed.

VOICE (LEO)

Biscuit Originals. Made from the good stuff. Made for dogs who deserve it. Real ingredients. No fillers. One very happy dog. The treat your dog wants. The label you're not embarrassed by.

Two copy paths exist on the board (product-forward vs. brand-voice). Illustration should support both: benefit-clear and worth remembering.

PALETTE - AWAITING JORDAN

Check with Jordan before finishing colored renders. Sketch and greyscale can proceed now.

YOUR ACTION ITEMS

- Rework character references
  Replace mascot-forward, multi-breed refs with actual golden retriever photo references.
- Finalize a pose library
  At least 6 poses for varied scene compositions in the promo.
- Work on sketches now
  Don't wait on color sign-off; stay greyscale until Jordan confirms.
- Hold the line language
  Graphic, gestural, not a painted render of a photo.

OPEN BLOCKER

> Color palette is not approved. Jordan must confirm the earth-tone variants before any colored renders are finalized. Stay greyscale until resolved.

WHO TO LOOP IN

- Jordan
  Color palette approval; final call on whether the dog still "feels like my dog."
- Maya, Creative Director
  Escalate any direction ambiguity.
- Priya, Brand Strategist
  Warmth and audience tone.
- Leo, Copywriter
  Lock illustration to the line that ships (product-forward vs. emotion-led).

- Jin / Ren
  Web and motion will inherit this character; keep poses usable in layout and in motion.

HOW TO USE THIS PDF

Treat this as the single source of truth for illustration on the Axis Studio Promo Video. When a reference on the board conflicts with the rules above, the rules win. Theme 01 is the system; the other themes are context, not competing directions.
